We often use set theory as the foundation of probability theory. We start by defining the sample space as the set of all possible events.

Example 1. I have a fair coin, and the sample space for tossing the coin would be

$$S = \{H, T\}$$

where H, and T stands for head and tail, respectively.